Mark Dorf is a photographer and sculptor from Louisville Kentucky. Mixing his photography with digital media, Dorf explores the relationships between the natural and digital worlds. His series //_PATH uses early 3D scanning technology to create geometric forms within the plane of a landscape. Interested in the way we as a society have become dependent on technology, Dorf offers that "it is no longer about logging on or off, but rather living within and creating harmony with the realms and constructs of the internet for our newest generation of inhabitants."
