Emilio Bianchic: Nailture

I only know Buenos Aires-based cyberfeminist Emilio Bianchic's work from the internet (which is really its native habitat) but it is equally adorable and clever. I'm curious to see what a brick-and-mortar exhibition is going to look like. Nailture is based around the premise that the interwebs is not the democratic sphere it is frequently hailed as: it's privatized space that is inaccessible to billions of people. Bianchic proposes finding freedom of expression in a different kind of "digital"—the manicure! Because everyone has nails. And you don't have to call yourself an artist to paint them.
